Currently, there is no standardised terminology for competency development and no evidence-based research on competency measurement for nurses in the field of public health. This paper reports on two parts of a larger study which aims to address this. This is a phenomenological-hermeneutic study carried out across four Australian states and four territories using a concept analysis framework. The paper reports on the first phase of the study which aimed to determine the Australian National Competency Frameworks for public health nurses. The specific objectives for the study are: i) to undertake a concept analysis of the term competency and ii) to determine the requirements for measuring competency. This paper reports on the analysis of the first objective of the
